THE VANE BARONETOY.

A case has for some days taken up the time of the Court of Chancery which lets very considerable light on the manners and habits of the English aristocrapy. Towards the end of the last century there was, it appears, an old gentleman of the name of Yane, who possessed considerable property in Cumberland. Mr. Vane bad a son called Frederick. As far as can be made out, the non bated the lather and the father bated the sop, and as the estates were entailed, the parent and the child were continually being brought into adverse, if not und consequently added to the money value of his astates the dignity of a title. Menntime his son, Frederick Vane, had been leading a life not sltogether decorous or well-conducted. He had, it seems, fixed his affections on a certain Miss' Hannah Bowerbank, a domestic serchildren were born of the union. Ultimately, eisa hinged .. and might be expected, has been very exthe defendant, the second baronet, then Mr. Frederick Vane, was legally and duly married to Miss Bowerbank, and twenty days after the marriage a son was born. This son, Francis Vaco, was, it is alleged, always recognised by bis inther as his lawful heir. He was so described in various family deeds, mortgages; and similar instruments. He was so described in an Act of sple of a portion of the Vane estates. There is in short, no doubt that, from first to last, old Sirrederick Vanealways reacgnised hiseon Francis as hig lawful beir. Lady Frederick Vane, otherwice Miss Haunah Bowerbank, behaved in the a mere boy, a fictitious exit was instituted in Chancery, with the sole object of putting upon record evidence of the legitimacy of Francia Vane, and for this purpose affidavite were filed, positively declared that be had been born

In the due course of events Mr. Francis Vane was united to a certain Miss Diana Beauclero: Mr. Beauclero, the lady's father, was no doubt aware of the rumours, which were affoat as to the legitimacy of his sonin-law. It is indeed clear that he made inquisies and looked into the matter. As he was not a lawyer, the reasons on account of which he was satisfied, go for very little, but. it is evident that he was satisfied, and this fact. viewed in contanction with the rest of the case; is not unimportant. Miss Benuclero, after she legitimacy of Sir Ralph is, of course, beyond quest on. According to the English law the ceremony of murriage legitimates any child born after it. That the present baronet, Bir Ralph, is the legitiquate son of Francis Vane and Miss Dinna searchers is admitted. What is angreated is that Francis Vano himself was born, not a few and after the marriage of his father to Miss Hannah Bowerbank, but a few moments before it. To is was, indeed, the only issue which Vice-Connector Mallus was obliged to determine, and the evidence which he had to enide him WAR almost absulutely one-sided, It seems that after Mr. Frederick Vane bad-married Miss Bosovbank and after the birth of Francis Vune, a second son was born, Frederick Vane, the claimant in the present suit. The cese pat forward by Mr. Frederick Vane is, of John Smith, a fireman on the British steam and is said to be resolutely bent on the condign are only four or five feet high. Let us hope course, that have the eldest legitimate abild of baronetcy, As, however, adverse, peantsion, bas been maintained for very much more than twenty years, Mr. Frederick Vane had to set up a case of compiracy and fraud. To establish his own case be had to invite Vice-Chancellor Maline to believe that his own father and mother had fraudulently falsified the registry of baptism of his elder brother; that, knowing his elder brother to be intermined the school commonly cated the fact of his illegitimacy to him? that they had communicated the same fact to Mr. Bounciere and to Miss Diana Benuclero, and that they had done all this without any possible

> It is carry to conjecture the reasons which brought this painful case before the Court. Old Hir Frederick Vane, the second baronet, wan evidently a disrepusable, disagresable, generolaceno man. Ho bates his father, Sir Lionel, and his father betse him. The estates being absolutely settled upon him, he manays his father by refusing to marry and by somiracting a dierenutable alliance with a housemaid. Seeing, however, that other beirs to the title and satute are springing up, he marries Miss Bowerbank and disappoints his relations by being a few days after his marriage presented with a son and heir. We are bound, o course, to accept the decision of Vice Chancelfor Malins as final, and there can be, indeed, no manner of doubt that Francis, who afterwards became the third batonet, was born after the matriage of his father and mother, and not before it. The matter, bowever, does not end bere. A second you is born, and, as far as can be made out, each of the two brothers cordially bates the other, and both are equally bated by beir patenta. Sir Frederick Vane, whenever he winhed to monoy his eldest legitimate son, used to call him a" bustard," and it is slear that he indulged in this opprobrious epithet on every possible opportunity and at the top of his coloc. Lady Vane, once Miss Bowerbank, threw out exmitar and equally offensive imputations. The elder brother and the younger. not being upon apeaking terms, the younger seems to have enught up this stray and random abuse on the part of bis parents; and to have endsayoured, by the aid of it, to hamtturned his newphew, the undoubted heir of his Fother, one of the estates. The acceptation falled, as it deserved, and the only moral of the case is the strange light which is let by it on what may be called the inner life of great county families. Sir Lionel, the first baronet; is at deadly feud with his son Frederick. Frederick has an illegitlmate family by a woman whom he ultimately marries. After his marriage he has two sons, He quarrels with the elder of these, who is his right-II. did not bate George III. half so badly as George III. hated George IV. Francis, in return, bates his father back, and is buted with equal faryour by his younger brother Frederick. The hutred lives beyond the grave, for Frederick, the uncle; attempts to turn his own nephew and his brother's oldest son out of the nest. The attempt has sailed, and it can only be said that
